It was noted several months since that Houston Ball, of Middlesboro, had brought suit against W. P. Walton, of the Stanford INTERIOR JOURNAL for $5,000 alleged damages to the said Ball's good name. In the Bell county circuit court the editor won last week, as many friends among the press boys and elsewhere hoped he would. In this same connection we would like to inquire what sense or justice there is in compelling the defendant in a Hbel suit to answer in the plaintiff's county, often many miles distant, instead of in the county where the newspaper is published, and presumably where the damage, if any, has been done? Several shreds. years ago one of the Richmond papers said something about a man in Somerset that caused a libel suit. The Richmond editor was forced to answer in the Pulaski circuit court and, although he got out of the scrape, it was not until he had been put to a deal of expense exacted by an unfair law. LEWIS DEMARCUS SAMPSON. In evidence of what pluck, ambition and energy will accomplish, we present a short sketch of the life of Lewis D. Sampson. In 1870, Feb. 18, he first saw the light on a farm in Laurel county and now, almost unaided either by money or influential friends, he is the head of the department of journalism in the Normal College at Valparaiso, Ind. After obtaining a fair education at the Laurel Seminary at London, he moved to Barbourville and during the years of '90 and '91 edited the News of that place. He then took a law course at the college in which he is now a professor and in 1892 returned to Barbourville and founded the Herald, which he conducted very successfully and with

THE PERFECT WOMAN.

She was a phantom of delight Her eyes as stars of twilight fair;

To haunt, to startle and waylay.

I saw her upon nearer view. Sweet records, promises as sweet; A creature not too bright or good, For human nature's daily food; For transient sorrows, simple wiles,

The very pulse of the machine: A being, breathing thoughtful breath, The reason firm, the temperate will, Endurance, foresight, strength and skill; A perfect woman, nobly planned, With something of an angel light.
